What is special about the Third Sunday of Advent? For much of the Church's history, this Sunday had a special name: "Gaudete" Sunday. The traditions surrounding this Sunday go back as far as the fourth or fifth century, as does the season of Advent itself. Advent, our preparation for Christmas, was originally a forty-day penitential season like Lent. In fact, since it used to begin on November 12 (just after the Memorial of St. Martin of Tours), it was called "St. Martin's Lent." "Gaudete Sunday" was the Advent counterpart to "Laetare Sunday," which marks the midpoint in Lent.

On Gaudete Sunday, the season of Advent shifts its focus. For the first two weeks of Advent, the focus can be summed up in the phrase, "The Lord is coming." But beginning with Gaudete Sunday, the summary might be, "The Lord is near." This shift is marked by a lighter mood and a heightened sense of joyous anticipation.

Liturgically, the colors lighten as well. The priest usually wears rose-colored vestments, a hue seen only on Gaudete Sunday and Laetare Sunday. On this day, we light the third candle of the Advent wreath, which is also rose-colored, or if you prefer, pink.

The word "Gaudete" is Latin for "Rejoice." In times when the focus of our anticipation is often on the negative and fearful, this celebration is a reminder that God who loves us is still in charge and that we await his coming not with fear, but with tremendous joy.

Dear Parishioners,

On this Gaudete Sunday, joy is a natural frame for understanding today's readings. These readings focus on our call to create a world reflective of God's plan.

A quick Google search for the word joy provides images of people leaping into the air or with their arms outstretched in victory. These images reflect joy as a temporary rush of positive feelings. Today's Scripture passages offer another type of joy, one that originates from within and keeps us connected to the love of the One who calls us.

These readings outline exactly what that call involves: We are anointed "to bring glad tidings to the poor, to heal the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives and release to the prisoners" (Isaiah 61:1-2a). These works of mercy and justice are the mark of our discipleship. They are also quite challenging. Truly practicing solidarity with those who experience injustice can wear at our optimism. We may separate ourselves from the work of discipleship to seek a temporary rush of joy so that we feel refreshed enough to continue.

Thich Nhat Hanh, a Zen Buddhist teacher, offers wisdom about how to avoid this division between discipleship and joy. He draws parallels between the Holy Spirit and the Buddhist practice of mindfulness: Both allow us to tap into the deeper truths that always surround us.

To explain how Buddhists think about mindfulness, he offers a parable in the well-known book, Living Buddha, Living Christ:

When the Buddha was asked, "Sir, what do you and your monks practice?" he replied, "We sit, we walk, and we eat." The questioner continued, "But sir, everyone sits, walks, and eats," and the Buddha told him, "When we sit, we know we are sitting. When we walk, we know we are walking. When we eat, we know we are eating."

Today's readings speak of joy in discipleship, just as Thich Nhat Hanh speaks of mindfulness in sitting, walking and eating. As Isaiah acknowledges that he is anointed to proclaim liberty to captives, he also "rejoice[s] heartily in the Lord" (61:10). Mindfully seeking joy in each thing we do allows us to constantly tap into the source of love and goodness; is this not one response to Paul's admonishment to "pray without ceasing"? (1 Thessalonians 5:17).

Jesuit Fr. Gregory Boyle lives a compelling example of the "Gospel joy which enlivens the community of disciples" (The Joy of the Gospel #21). In his book, Tattoos on the Heart, Boyle shares stories from his work in Los Angeles employing and mentoring former gang members. His advice on practicing joy, as captured in an NPR interview in 2009, speaks of being present in each moment: "You know, you don't really get Jesus saying very often there'll be pie in the sky when you die. He's really talking about now and today ... You're supposed to delight in what's right in front of you. ... If you are paying attention, then the day is going to be pretty joyful, and a lot of delight will fill it."

Finding joy in our work for peace and justice may not come easily. At times, we may wonder whether our "crying out in the desert" will ever yield the world we seek. As in spiritualities rooted in mindfulness, seeking joy in each action is a practice, and the more we practice it, the easier it becomes. As it does, we are continually grounded in joy, which makes us more effective preparers of the way of the Lord.

Peace, Fr. Kevin
